The 2017 national event will feature interactive panels addressing the following topics:

- The importance of social, emotional, behavioral, and physical health needs of children, youth, and young adults
- Modeling effective communication practices between behavioral health providers, primary care providers, families, and youth
- Addressing the needs of youth with co-occurring chronic illnesses and mental and/or substance use disorders

During the national event, families, youth, and young adults across the country will have an opportunity to pose questions to panelists on the national stage through email and social media.
